

How the Theological and Law Practices of Robert Fuggi Jr. Are Interwoven

Robert Fuggi Jr. of Fuggi Law Firm has received a Law Journal Innovator honor.

Fuggi, in lieu of responding to the Law Journal's Q&A, sent information and quotes about his firm and practice, which are summarized in part below.

Fuggi, known for handling litigation on behalf of sexual abuse victims against numerous institutions, has also excelled as an innovator in his field: he is the founder of the School of Biblical Studies and Theological Inquiry, which started as a Princeton Field Study program at Princeton Theological Seminary in 2014. He also is the founding and current pastor of Toms River Community Church and became an ordained minister in 2005. And over the past 11 years, Fuggi and his church volunteers have established one of the largest community homeless outreaches in Ocean County, according to his law firm. Fuggi also authored "A New Model of the Authentic Church."

Those accomplishments have driven his law practice, where Fuggi "attempts to handle cases that other firms aren't interested in, or may be too complex," according to his firm, which "was formed as a general practice firm" but "has morphed over the years into handling complex litigation, civil rights, sexual abuse and other high-profile cases."

Fuggi attended Princeton Theological Seminary, earning a master of divinity and a theological masters, and now is pursuing a Ph.D. in quantum mechanics and its relation to the Incarnation, the firm noted.

"Since I had significant trial experience coupled with a theological training, I began to represent victims of institutional sexual abuse," Fuggi said in a statement. "I try to take more socially and morally significant cases."

He added, "As lawyers, we're well-educated and have the wherewithal to bring forth positive societal change. We also have an obligation to help out those who are voiceless." ■
